

Berlin "Doggy Deli" Sparks Howls Of "Decadence"

Many people in Germany are upset about a new restaurant. Why? The restaurant does not serve food to people. It serves food to dogs and cats!

The restaurant is called Pets Deli. It is located in the upscale neighborhood of Grunewald, in Berlin. Meals at the restaurant cost from three to six euros. Treats, such as cupcakes, are also available.

Dogs and cats can eat the meals in the restaurant. Meals are served in metal bowls. The bowls are set in front of logs. This is so the dogs and cats can eat in a "homey" environment. While the pets eat their meal, their owners can enjoy a cup of coffee.

Pets Deli also serves meals to go.

Not everybody is happy about this restaurant.

"A store this decadent gives the impression that we do more for animals than for children," Wolfgang Buescher said. Buescher runs a charity for poor children.

David Spanier owns the business. Spanier said his dog could not digest regular dog food. He said that dog food from supermarkets was like junk food for animals.

Do you think that dog food from supermarkets is like junk food for the dogs?
